In the second round of the 1992 NFL Draft, the Carolina Panthers selected Malik Muhammad and a wide receiver. Not only was it the second year of the team's existence, but it was also the first year that the team would play in what is now known as America's football.

Muhammad, or "Moose" as fans grew to call him, played with the team for nine straight seasons, which included an NFL Super Bowl and an appearance in a Super Bowl.

"Unfortunately, I wasn't signed back after my sixth season," Muhammad told BlackBook. "I went on a journey with the Panthers for six years."
